

Bionote: Aditi Mukherjee is a Research and Programme Associate at the Calcutta Research Group (CRG). She holds a BA and MA in History from the Presidency College and the University of Calcutta respectively. She has also completed her MPhil in Foreign Policy Studies from the University of Calcutta. Aditi is currently a PhD researcher at the Leiden University, the Netherlands and in the final stages of completion of her doctoral research. Her PhD dissertation draws on ethnographic research conducted at different types of migrant dwellings located at the peri urban margins of Calcutta, in an attempt to address questions of different modalities of displacement and tiers of migrant/urban citizenship within third world metropolitan contexts. She is the recipient of the Erasmus Mundus IBIES PhD fellowship from September 2013 to August 2016. She is associated with the 1947 Partition Archive based at Berkeley, California as a Citizen Historian and has contributed interviews of East Bengali migrants to the Archive. She has presented her research widely at many international forums including the School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London, the Lund University, University of Gottingen among others on themes of displacement, place-making, and tiers of migrant citizenship in post-colonial South Asia. She has published her research in journals and seminar proceeding volumes. She has also been involved in organizing international conferences on the theme of displacement. Her broad research interests include processes of third world urbanism, and myriad forms of dispossession and displacement associated with it.
