

Laura Amadori has more ten years of working experience in project and programme management in West Africa. She worked for UNWOMEN Regional office of Dakar, providing policy analysis and advice on West Africa programming on gender equality. She also conducted research on women's migration and cross-border trade and supported implementation of a sub-regional project on this domain.

Subsequently Laura worked as Senegal Program Coordinator/Head of Senegal's sub office for Concern Universal from leading the organization's peace building strategy for Casamance and Strategy on refugees and migrants' rights especially taking into account cross-border migration and refugees' situation in The Gambia. From 2011 she joined UNDP Guinea Bissau to coordinate projects on youth and volunteerism and programs since 2017, she is Head of Office at IOM Guinea Bissau supporting the country's efforts toward better migration governance and coordinating protection and reintegration projects for returnees migrants in the country and prevention of human trafficking. She holds a Master degree in Cooperation and Development from the University of Bologna and a post graduate certificate on Environmental Sustainability from University College of Dublin. She is very interested in the nexus between environment and migration and on protection of migrants especially youth, women and children.