

Sucharita Sengupta is a Doctoral Candidate at the department of Anthropology and Sociology in the Graduate Institute of International and Development Studies, Geneva. Before this, she has been working on issues related to migration and forced migration in Asia as part of her work in the Calcutta Research Group. For her PhD, she is working on conditions of life under 'Statelessness', through the case study of Rohingya refugees in camps of Bangladesh and India. The work intends to explore existing categories within refugee studies that in turn triggers debate on the anthropology of state and how modern governance is conceived.
