

QUESTIONS FORMULATED BY OLIVER RICHMOND, DIRECTOR,
CENTRE FOR PEACE AND CONFLICT STUDIES, SCHOOL OF INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS, UNIVERSITY OF ST. ANDREWS

Oliver Richmond, Director, Centre for Peace and Conflict Studies, posed the following questions around which the discussion took place among the participants:

- How well do the original questions in the proposal hold up after our fieldwork? Should we modify them and if so: in which way?
- How relevant is Foucault's critique of governance in our empirical contexts i.e. of Eurocentric or Indian state governance? How far do issues relating to culture, or post-colonial critiques and debates about Western/ non western forms of governance, help us?
- How relevant are the varied contextual/ cultural critiques of governance / conflict resolution in our project?

What types of agencies can be seen in EU conflict resolution or Indian conflict resolution settings. Do they oppose or modify/ work with governance approaches? Do EU or Indian modes of institutional or state governance facilitate or hinder CR, and if so how?

- Do governance approaches to conflict resolution impact on social justice / gender relations / human security / civil and political liberties in our case studies? If so: in which way?
- What general and specific dynamics have become clearer relating to conflict/ and or peace-related local agency, mobilisation, and capacity after our fieldwork? It will be interesting to discuss if these mean different things within and between India and Europe.
- What have we learned about the permutations of statehood (and related social contracts/ compacts and citizenship) in India and the EU?
